

International Student Leadership Program

In an increasingly interconnected world, maintaining a global perspective and knowing how to negotiate cultural differences have become critical qualifications for young people who strive for careers in competitive global markets.

The International Student Leadership Program is held on the campus of California State University, Fullerton (CSUF). International university students are given an extraordinary chance to gain an educational and cultural experience of a lifetime. They will cross personal and cultural boundaries to become part of a working group and pursue a shared goal.

The goal of this 3-week summer program is to assess and develop an understanding of leadership and to grow the skills required of the emerging leaders of today. The activities and workshops will enable the students to recognize their personal leadership style.

Students will take what they have learned and lead their peers in activities which build to a final presentation that will be judged in competition to celebrate the completion of the program.

Program Features:

- Lectures and workshops delivered by expert instructors in the areas of leadership, English language and American culture
- All classes and activities conducted in English to enhance fluency
- Each student's leadership style is assessed, along with other necessary leadership skills
- Students with different personal and cultural styles work together on a creative project
- Students experience Southern California culture – from its beautiful beaches to Hollywood, Disneyland, Universal Studios and more.
